What is Syndication?

Syndication represents a method for distributing products from one marketplace to another. In general, syndication enables to synchronize product data across multiple sales channels while complying with their provided business and legal requirements.

Syndication can be increasingly important for Connect users, since syndicating can drastically increase product exposure. Which in turn helps Connect users reach new audience and new potential customers.

Your organization can also skyrocket the sales by distributing a product across different marketplaces. Customers tend to use various platforms and sales channels for various needs. For instance, a customer can acquire certain products by using global marketplaces (eBay, Alibaba, etc.), while this customer can buy specific products from niche-focused platforms (like ASOS or Bonanaza).

Therefore, syndication enables Connect users to address flexibility and diversity in their marketing strategies, which consequently greatly increases the company's sales.

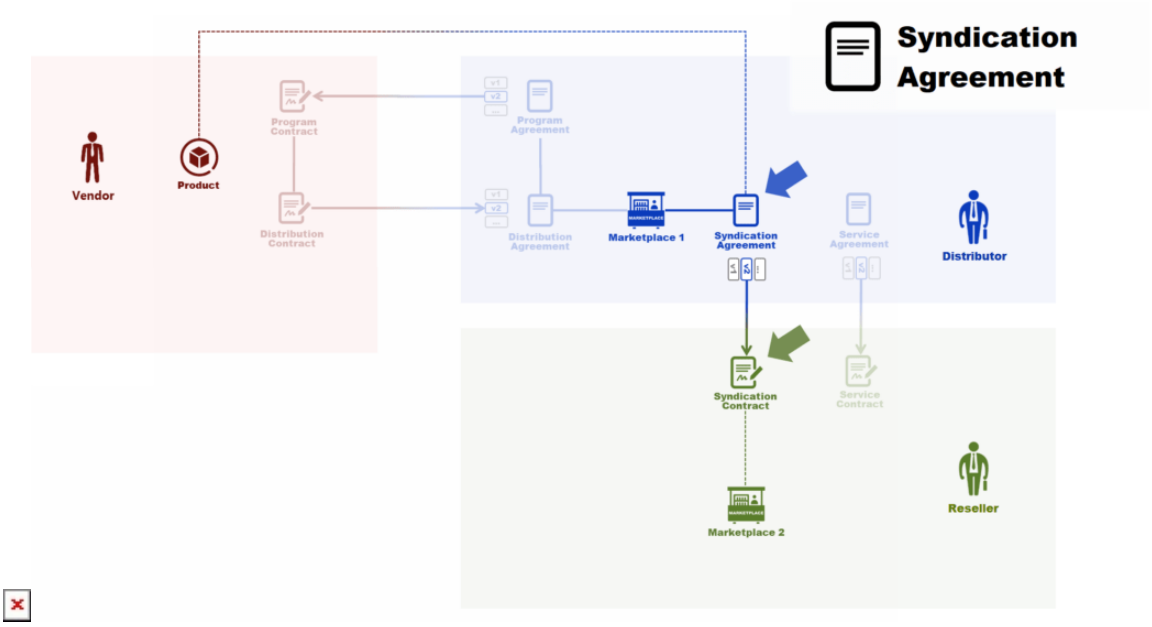

Overview

Distributors create a syndication agreement to sign a syndication contract with Resellers on the CloudBlue Connect® platform. Thus, Connect enables Distributors to establish sale chains via Reseller marketplaces by creating syndication agreements and activating syndication contracts.
